The Division, which oversees the state's recreational pot industry, expects to receive more than 80,000 applications for people seeking licenses to sell recreational marijuana by Friday. "This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for people," said Division Director Robert Corry. "I hope everyone takes advantage of it." Corry's team is also starting to accept applications for people wanting to become businesses that cultivate marijuana. In-state businesses can legally start growing pot for recreational use on Jan. 1, 2016, and must be licensed by July 1. Businesses that cultivate marijuana for recreational use are required to have a combined business and residential license. And the Division is offering business licenses only to companies with a physical presence in Colorado, rather than offering them online through an application process. The Division expects to begin accepting applications for those licenses on Jan. 25, and to receive thousands more by Feb. 1. Applications for those licenses will cost a minimum of $50,000. Corry said the Division anticipates that as many as 1,500 companies will be licensed to grow marijuana for the recreational market in the first year, and that the number will rise to 10,000 companies by the end of the second year. "We have a new industry in Colorado, and they're going to need trained employees to run that industry," Corry said. "That's what we're doing now, and that's why we're doing this now." The Division will begin accepting applications for companies that want to be licensed to distribute
